

The Social Survey (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Social Survey This book lays no claim to originality. A considerable share of what is here presented was published in pamphlet form as Bulletin No. 20 of the Department of Social and Public Service of the American Unitarian Association. It was then revised and enlarged before its publication in a second edition, and was subject to additional changes when it was published as a series of magazine and newspaper articles. The kind reception given to the pamphlets and articles which I have published on the subject of surveys, and the widespread use that has been made of them in club and classroom work, throughout this country, and in some instances abroad, prompt me to enlarge the scope of the work into book form, in the hope of recording in a connected and relevant way the experience gained in recent years in the field of social surveys. The lines of inquiry suggested can hardly be considered as sufficiently detailed to cover the field in any of the subjects discussed. What I have hoped to do, is to present to the reader broad outlines of general investigation in the expectation that those undertaking a social survey would soon become conscious of the more intricate and more subtle manifestations of social life that lend themselves to analysis and measurement. A guide for social survey work, that would cover the whole field of surveys and include a discussion of the technique required for an efficient collection, classification and interpretation of social facts, is beyond the scope of this book, and could hardly be condensed into one work unless it be in the nature of a sociological encyclopedia.
